Tea Time

by Lora B

Isabelle looked around the little park the town had recently added, searching for her friend. This was the time Rosie had told her to come right? She checked her watch, hoping that she hadn't worked past the meeting time again. She did that a lot lately, but usually Rosie would come and check on her if she was-

"Isabelle! Come over here, silly." She turned towards the voice and saw her friend Rosie, waving her down from next to the flower arch near the bridge. Thank goodness, she didn't miss their meeting! She ran over to her, scooping her up into a hug before putting her back down.

"Rosie! What did you want to see me for?"

"Well..." Rosie scratched the side of her head, embarrassed. "I wanted to have a tea party with you once you got off work today, but... my new tea set didn't come in. Redd said it would be here by tomorrow though! Do you want to join me for a tea party when they come in, silly?"

Isabelle thought about it for a minute. She had so much work to do... but then again she hadn't been able to spend much time with Rosie lately. She really missed talking to the blue cat and spending time with her...

"You know what...? I might have some time in the afternoon. I'd love to join you, Rosie." That's what she'd do during her lunch period. Isabelle was sure the mayor wouldn't mind - they were always telling her to take a break and spend time with her friends after all.

"Really?!" Rosie's face lit up in excitement. "Ok! Then meet me tomorrow at 12 sharp, silly!"

She turned and ran towards her house, so quickly that Isabelle didn't even have a chance to reply. Isabelle shook her head fondly at her friend's antics before walking home. She needed to be well rested for tomorrow's party.

"Rosie? Are you home?" Isabelle knocked on the door of Rosie's house before opening it. She walked into the front area, taking off her coat and placing it on the back of a chair at the table.

"Isabelle! You're just in time, silly."

Rosie was opening up a box in her kitchen, smiling brightly. "The new tea set was just delivered! Wait till you see them, they're so lovely."

She opened the box and her bright smile turned into a confused frown, worrying Isabelle. "What's wrong Rosie?"

"...This isn't the set I ordered." She turned the pink teapot, frowning. "And there's a large hole in this pot! How are we supposed to make tea with this, silly?"

"And all of them have this weird residue, Rosie." Isabelle picked up one of the white and blue cups, examining it. "Maybe we should talk to Red about this - Ah!"

"Oh my!" Rosie lept back as a teapot jumped out of her hands, followed by several little pink and blue teacups still in the box jumping out. They jumped around the kitchen floor, rattling against the tiles, as something tried to get out of them.

Slowly, the residue on the cups and pot started to shape into bodies. From the cups dogs half the size of Isabelle appeared, the cups covering their heads like little hats. From the teakettle appeared to be a human wearing an Embroidered Dress and glasses with a strange swirl pattern obscuring their eyes. They let out a groan, rubbing the back of their head, before getting up and looking around. "Oh my," they looked around the room, confused. "Excuse me dear, but what town are we in?"

"Um, you're - you are in Ashtowne."

"Oh... well, that's quite far from where we wanted to be isn't it my darlings?" The small pups pulled out a map and started going over it with crayons, quickly making it into an unreadable mess - at least in Isabelle's eyes. Somehow the odd person was able to understand it completely, muttering as they took it and turned it in several ways. "Goodness, looks like it's quite a bit of traveling from here to Sylvan. I don't believe we'll make it there for another day or so! Hopefully we'll be able to catch another train before the day ends."

Rosie gently cleared her throat. "Say, you wouldn't happen to have seen another tea set while you were traveling, did you silly?"

"I'm sorry to say madame, but we did not. We were the only tea set in that compartment I assure you. I checked! We can never be too careful about how we travel. I'm sorry to say you've been duped." The smaller ones nodded and repeated the final word after the larger one spoke, like a little chorus.

"But, not to worry!" The spirit clapped their hands and quickly moved towards the door. "Me and Ol' Brewster are great friends. I know for a fact he's got an old kettle somewhere we can borrow for our tea party."

The teacup pups quickly followed her at the mention of a tea party, two of them grabbing Rosie's and Isabelle's hands and pulling them into the group. Isabelle looked over to Rosie, unsure what to do; but Rosie smiled happily as she was pulled by the pup - quickly running alongside them to get to the party faster. So Isabelle went along with it too, smiling down at the pup and letting it lead her to Brewster's.

Old Traditions, New People

by Lora B

"Hey Isabelle!" Isabelle turned towards the voice calling her to see Macho waving her down. "Have you seen the mayor, mach?"

Isabelle shook her head as she messed with some of the papers in her arms, "no, no I haven't. I've been looking for her because I want her to look over some ideas for the garden. I don't know where she could be..."

"Isn't Dani coming today?" Veler called out from the other side of the river as he walked by.

Isabelle started to frantically flip through her planner, "oh my goodness, you're right! Thank you Veler!" She ran towards the train station, only stopping when someone grabbed her from behind. She became incredibly grateful soon afterwards, since a pair of wheels quickly rolled through where she was originally. "Watch out Isabelle. The mayor's on a roll - literally, swee."

"Dani's almost here! Dani's coming home!" She sang as she spun around the platform, occasionally being pushed away from the tracks by her best friend Tom. "Lora please calm yourself, grrr."

"Yeah; and stay away from the tracks! I'm not dealing with that paperwork again!!" Porter yelled from behind his desk. She stopped in front of the entranceway and turned towards him, fingers bouncing across the armrests of her wheelchair. "Sorry Porter. I'm just so excited! Don't worry though, I'll try not to become a pancake."

Porter opened his mouth to retort-

She sped towards the side facing the tracks. "She's here!"

A primerina shifted through some paperwork as he spoke. "Don't worry mayor, I know your sister and I guarantee you... she won't be fazed."

"I hope so... Arik?" The primarina turned towards his mayor, stopping his work to look at his mayor. "Yes Joshua?"

"Thank you."

"It is no problem, sir."

The train slowly started to stop, the boy's heart pounding against his bones the closer it got to the terminal. He was starting to regret waiting to tell her till now, but it was too late now. I'll just have to deal with it, he thought as the train stopped.

He stepped off the train, looking around for his sister.

"Dani! Over here!!" He turned towards the voice, before freezing - causing both him and Arik to almost fall over when he ran into Joshua. His sister... rolled over to him, in a black wheelchair, and quickly pulling him into a hug. It seemed they both had something to tell the other.

He put his arms around her and waited for a second before he awkwardly started the conversation, "Hey, big sis... what - what's up with the wheelchair?"

She flinched. "Oh- this ol' thing? It's nothin' kid. I just got into... an accident," quickly she moved him so she could see his face, "but enough about me sis how-"

"Hey- hey sis?" She looked up, still grinning from ear to ear, quieting down to hear what he wanted to say. He took a deep breath before quietly saying, "I'm... I'm not Dani anymore. I'm Joshua."

She blinked a few times, seemingly taking in the news, before a small shy smile "Well... do you still like flowers Joshua?"

"Yeah... yeah I do."

A grin broke out across her face, and she pulled him away from the station, rambling about the new flower arch she had made - decorated with his favorite flowers - and how much the garden had changed since he had been here last. He looked back at Arik, who smiled and waved as he was taken away, and smiled back.

It was nice to know his sister's love for him would never change.

Joshua soon came to realize that her love was not the only thing that hadn't changed. Her citizens were still as lively as ever, if the butterfree barreling down into the garden was any indication.

"Madam mayor!" Piewing screamed, waving their arms frantically.
"Madam mayor, they're here, sweet!"

"Yes!" Tom lifted the mayor up - wheelchair and all - and ran towards the beach as they both hollered with excitement, Isabelle trailing behind them reminding Tom not to break her wheelchair again. Joshua and Arik trailed behind them, not wanting to get run over by her excited townspeople who were also running to the beach, but equally excited for the event they knew was about to take place.

He had forgotten it was pyukumuku season.

Several pyukumuku were wandering around the beach in a confused manner, perfect for chucking. Joshua didn't remember how this tradition had started within his sister's town, but nowadays it was a tradition loved by everyone within her town - especially Tom. He grabbed onto the shoulders of one of them and started to spin, gaining enough momentum to chuck the pyukumuku at least a mile away. He bowed towards Lora like an actor who had finished their play and she started clapping enthusiastically before holding up a sign with the number '10' on it.

Before her accident his sister used to challenge the citizens of Melmoon to see who could throw them the furthest, and it seemed like the challenge was still on, albeit in a new direction. Joshua watched the others chuck them into the sea with grand throws for his sister to judge happily next to the ramp that lead back to town.

"You're going down this time, Tom!" Bouncee screamed as she threw a pyukumuku so hard it skipped across the ocean. It went a little farther than Tom's first pyukumuku, and she turned to him with a gleeful smirk.

When a pyukumuku flew past them, going farther than either of their throws. They both turned towards where it flew, seeing Arik dust off his suit jacket with a smirk. The tension between the competitive trio ignited, and they ran off to grab more pyukumuku to chuck.

Joshua laughed as he watched them chuck the poor souls into the ocean, then walked over to the ramp and sat next to his sister. He had never really enjoyed joining in the tradition, but it was certainly entertaining. A few minutes later Lora shoved several signs towards him, each one holding a different number. He gently took them from her grasp and she smiled at him before turning back towards the participants, throwing up an 8 sign into the air enthusiastically.

He smiled and held up a 9.

for my oldest friend, "do you still like animal crossing, bro?"
